These arias, which Handel presumably ahi sorte ria - Score as the fancy took him rather than in the generally accepted order, are settings of verses which, in an early Enlightenment spirit, praise Mi parto divinely ordered universe and its Creator, extolling the beauties of the earth and of human life in a vivid and graphic idiom. This, of course, could be a general warning to any auditor, but one possibility is that Pamphilj was directing his message specifically to Handel. After defending his plot and characters by citing classical precedents, he confesses: "I have taken the liberty of a couple of hours: I don't know if Aristotle or Aristarchus will grant them to me" Appendix I.
