Etton was one of the earliest sites of its type yet found in Britain, and is certainly the best preserved. The dense clouds of smoke smelled just like an autumn bonfire, and bore no resemblance whatsoever to the distinctive aroma of tobacco. I have seen the aftermath of a fierce storm, when wire, fencing, young trees and posts had been hurled inland. It was a land of birds and dunes, of thin wiry grasses, orchids and Scotspines. You just clipped your first slide! I have been working there ever . That evening, the phone lines from the Norfolk Archaeological Unit hummed. V All.
