Two grey old women, witchlike, with hanging breasts and dugs of finger-length, were busy there, between flaming braziers, most horribly. Harry Lyndon Brockmann—a physician, was old enough to be a veteran not of the Second but of the First World War, although he served not at the front but in the decidedly more comfortable environment of Washington, DC; Gilbert Justus Sam Samuelson—73as a petroleum chemist, was lucky enough, during the Second World War, to be deemed more crucial as a researcher than as a soldier.
