The illuminations of God cannot coexist with the darkness of jahiliyya. These and many similar questions are among the basic quandaries that face modern humanity. And, as already noted, in Islamic theosophy, self-knowledge and knowledge of God are inseparable.

This spirit underlay this century's continuous revolts against foreign rule. Does Islam offer one fixed and unchanging truth for all time, or is it flexible and open to change? A third position, which calls for the separation of religion from the state, but not from society, has been advocated by Sheikh Ali Abdel-Razik in his book Islam and Principles of Rule and by a powerful writer of the younger generation, Khalid Mohammed Khalid, whose From Here We Start has been widely read. In various religious teachings, observing the rights of plants and animals is ardently advised.

Sometimes, in the writings of today's post-orientalists or neo-orientalists of recent decades, modern technology has instigated fundamental and far-reaching crises such as the energy crisis and the environmental crisis.
