Rough Thicketail Scorpion - Dark Form. Could it be that this unnatural appearance is used to deter predators, just as frogs use aposematic colouring to warn their enemies that they are poisonous?

Mild inflammation may be present, with the stinging mark not always visible. Opi

If you find one in your house, scoop it up and let it go somewhere where there is vegetation. Bulbar paralysis, accompanied by respiratory distress, is more frequent in children than in adults and tends to be more severe.

In the event of anaphylactic reaction, which must always be anticipated, adults are reluctant to sting, however, if anyone is stung expect intense localised pain for a couple of hours. Scorpions are a greater problem in the north-western Cape than snakes.
