In the two years since Mike Brown was fatally shot by the police in Ferguson, and the video footage of his dead body in the street went viral, we have seen the emergence of a perverse dichotomy on our screens and in our public discourse: irrefutable evidence of grotesquely persistent racism, and irrefutable evidence of increasing black cultural and political power. And I think that helps a program, where people feel like they're not just watching tonight's show and tonight's material, they're watching this guy and they've got a relationship with this guy.
