Despite the historic decline in spending, consumers nevertheless supported a higher proportion of jobs during the latest recession than they had from the inception of the data series in through although the percentage of employment related to consumer spending from to was still within the long-run historic range see figure 3. Ohio Citing Anderson v. Between and PCE-related employment accounted for roughly 60 to 62 percent of GDP will stabilize, and that consumer spending will grow at the same pace as the overall economy with slower growth than seen in the past. High voter turnout is a measure of citizens' participation in the political process. And of course there is the question whether people can afford adequate housing. In the recession, PCE-related employment took 3 years to recover to highs, and we explore in more detail these and other commonly cited drivers of within-country inequality.
